Coroner Jackson and His Physician, Dr. O'Hanlon, Conducting a Searching Scrutiny Into the Strange Death of Maude Blanche Hayes.

Mother of the Young Woman Declares That Her Daughter Had Been in Ill Health Ever Since Attack By Brewer's Son, Said to Be Her Husband.

From the mysterious actions of Coroner Jackson and his physician, O'Hanlon, it is inferred that they have discovered evidence of a crime in the death of Maude Blanche Hayes. A physician who was called in after her death at No. 273 West Thirty-sixth street last Sunday night said that the cause of death was heart disease, but it is plain that the Coroner does not adhere to this theory.

Dr. O'Hanlon has received strict orders to keep what information he possesses to himself, consequently he is silent about the result of an autopsy he performed this afternoon. But, if there had been nothing discovered to controvert the theory that the girl died a natural death, he would

He went with them direct to Prof. Witthaus to have them chemically examined, which indicates that he found traces of poison.

There is little reason to believe that the girl killed herself. Her mother says that there was no poison in the room and Maude had not been out of the house for nearly a week. Coroner Jackson is convinced Portland 3. that there are features connected with the death of the girl that have

The campaign betting situation took on somewhat of a hurral turn to-day and quite a bunch of real money was wagered. Tammany men dug down into their bank accounts and dragged out large wads, which were stacked up against similar wads produced by men who think that Mayor Low will win.

There were no great big bets made, for the reason that each side accuses the other of holding off. Tammany men say the Fusion bettors are bluffing, and the charge is hurled right back at them. The odds shift in fractional points, and at the close of the day even money prevailed, although men anxious to get their money down before the campaign grows any older were compelled to give odds.
